OpenAI just announced ads inside ChatGPT itself.

SWIPE

Everyone will repeat the headline. Almost nobody will tell you what to actually do about it.

ChatGPT ads will sit inside answers people ask for, not a feed they scroll past.

On Meta or Google, you compete for a glance mid-scroll. That's attention you interrupt.

On ChatGPT, someone has already typed a question before your ad can appear at all.

That's attention you're invited into.
Different game, different rules, same budget you're already spending.

OpenAI's own title calls this building for "the way people use AI" — worth reading closely.

No self-serve dashboard exists yet for a small business to just log in and run this.

One thing you can start today, with zero new tools or spend.

- 1 Write the exact question a stranger would type before wanting your product
- 2 Keep that sentence — it's what you'll compete to answer later

The hook wasn't the announcement. It's that your ad stops being a banner and becomes an answer.

Budgets, targeting, creative — all of it still matters. It just moves upstream, to the question asked, not the ad seen.
