Nobody checks this before touching the creative.

02

Changing the ad first just makes the real leak harder to find.

03

Start in Ads Manager, not the ad. Open your campaign and find the Performance goal line first.

04

That one line tells Meta what to chase — leads, messages, or something else entirely.

05

Next, open the ad set below it and check what result it's actually been optimised for.

06

Those two settings decide who your ad gets shown to, before a single word of copy matters.

07

Then check the form or landing page the ad sends people to — not the ad itself.

08

A form asking for ten fields and a page that loads slowly both quietly kill replies.

09

Last, check who responds to a new lead, and how fast. This is where most leaks actually hide.

10

Across 7,341 lead-form submissions on nine accounts, the ad was rarely the problem.

Fix the account in this order: goal, ad set, form, follow-up. Creative comes last, not first.
