// FRAMEWORK

One lead form question decides who your sales team actually talks to.

02

Cheap leads and leads that close are two different products, not one.

03

Most forms ask name, phone, email
— nothing that rules anyone out.

4,248

LEADS AT ₹16.58

A Tirupur manufacturer got 4,248 wholesale leads at ₹16.58 each, no qualifying question in front of them.

05

Same ad budget, two different questions in the form.

NO QUALIFIER

Form asks name, phone, email only

ONE QUALIFIER

Form states the one thing that rules someone out

19

AT UNDER $6 EACH

The same manufacturer ran a campaign where the ad and form both stated a 200-piece minimum.

07

19 buyers responded to that minimum, at under $6 an enquiry — fewer leads, one condition stated upfront.

08

Pick your one qualifier before you touch the ad.

1. Find the single fact that rules someone out — order size, budget, location, timeline
2. State it plainly in the ad and again in the form
3. Never bury it as a dropdown with 'other' as an option

09

THE TRADE

A qualifier costs you volume. It buys back your sales team's time.

10

The hook holds: one honest question in a form changes who shows up on the other side of it.

Write the one fact that would make someone wrong for you. Put it in the form before you ask for their number.
