OpenAI just started paying hackers more to break its own systems.

SWIPE

This looks like news for engineers. It is actually about your login page.

03

A bug bounty pays outsiders to find security holes before criminals do.

OpenAI just raised what it pays them. That tells you something.

When the reward for breaking in goes up, so does the number of people trying.

06

Your ad account, your inbox, your CRM all sit behind one password most days.

07

Meta and Google already give you a free second lock on every account.

08

Most people never turn it on. Here is where it lives.

1. Meta: Settings → Security and Login → Two-Factor Authentication
2. Google: myaccount.google.com → Security → 2-Step Verification

THE COST

One missed step and a hacked ad account can drain a budget before you even see the alert.

The bigger bounty isn't the story. The fact that someone is always trying is.

Turn on two-factor login today. It takes three minutes and costs nothing.
