

Four clicks tell you what your ad is chasing.

Most people judge it by the creative.
Wrong screen entirely.

Nova Attire got 4,248 wholesale buyer leads at ₹16.58 each, across six campaigns.

Every one of those leads sits in Meta's own lead centre, tied to its ad and form.

That number has a receipt. What happened after the lead does not.

Nothing in the setup tracked a second order
— no reorder timing, no stock-running-low follow-up.

A lead who said 'not interested' was marked closed. Some came back later anyway, on their own.

The ad was never told any of this. It can only optimise for what you hand it.

So open Ads Manager. Campaign. Ad set.
One line decides everything: Performance goal.

Read that one line before you judge
the creative.

A cheap lead and a lead that reorders are two different things to measure.
