ChatGPT Ads just expanded, and over 100,000 advertisers have already used it.

Everyone will post this as news. The part worth checking is what kind of ad system this actually is.

On Meta, you buy attention from someone scrolling. That's a feed interruption, not a request.

On ChatGPT, the person typed a question first. The ad shows up inside their own search for an answer.

OpenAI built the ad stack around relevance to that question, not just your past clicks.

That changes what a 'good ad' even means. Interrupting well and answering well are not the same skill.

Most small business ad accounts are built only for the interrupt — a hook, a scroll-stop, a thumbnail.

None of that transfers automatically. A line that stops a scroll can fail completely inside an answer.

THE CHECK

Before you spend here, ask one thing: would my offer survive being read, not just seen?

The expansion is the headline. The shift from being seen to being asked for is the real news.
