A new place to spend money is not the news. What decides your result is.

Every ad platform runs on the same three things: a goal you set, a signal it learns from, a cost for getting it wrong.

OpenAI just published how its ad stack decides what you see — not just that ads exist, but how they're chosen.

On Meta, that goal lives in one place: Ads Manager, your ad set, the line called Performance goal.

Most people never open that line after campaign setup. It sits there, quietly deciding who you pay for.

The leak isn't the new platform. It's the old goal nobody rechecked.

SET ONCE

Goal chosen at launch, never revisited

CHECKED WEEKLY

Goal matched to what you actually need now

A new platform arriving just means one more goal line, in one more place, someone will forget to check.

THE HABIT

Before trying ChatGPT Ads or anything new, open your current one and read that line first.

The platform changes every year. The habit of checking what you told it to optimise for doesn't.
