

Meta just changed who runs its Southeast Asia business.

That news means nothing to your ad account. One setting near it does.

Every Meta ad campaign has a line called the Performance goal, hidden inside the ad set.

It tells Meta what to chase — leads, clicks, calls, or something else entirely.

Most people never open it. They judge the campaign from the creative instead.

Set it to 'maximise number of leads'
and Meta will hand you volume, not fit.

Set it to 'maximise conversion value'
and it starts chasing something closer to a sale.

Nobody at Meta flags this for you.
Not before you spend, not after.

CHECK THIS

Here's where it lives: Ads Manager → your campaign → the ad set → Performance goal.

That one line decides what kind of leads show up in your inbox tomorrow.

Jothi Swaroop.

PERFORMANCE MARKETING & AI SYSTEMS

JOTHISWAROOP.COM

@JOTHISWAROOP.AI · IN/JOTHISWAROOP

